BOYS WILL BE BOYS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE " DAILY PRESS." Sir -It is a great pity the little boys Hongkong can't be sent to the theatre with their nurses. They do make such unpleasant rows when they go by themselves. Poor little dears, it's quite a shame to say anything about it, because they do it so innocently, bless, eme little hearts. But as they can't be expected to see until they doff their pinafores, that their thoughtless frolic not only prevents the major rity of people from enjoying the performance, but also pains and annoys the actors, and in some onses the actress, it seems reasonable:to send them in charge of their amaba. I think perhaps it would be almost better to arrange a separate performance, and to exclude them from the regular entertainments. Ming Amadeus. Our Madrid correspondent writes under dat of the 17th of April .- " Of all the solutions o the Spanish problem proffered; to the choice of King Amadeus the least possible objection or isted. Young, but not too young to be led by the nose, educated as few Spaniards of his years are educated, and trained to kingly habits by the traditions of his family, he seems just the man Providence had intended for Spain. Since his arrival behas done his beat to identify himself with the people. He has mingled among them in the must Democratic manner, he has charmed them by his high personal courage, he has pleased them by his charity, he has visited their theatres and places of popular resort, not even omitting their bull fights. In short, he has done, and is doing, everything to prove the truth of what he enid in his speech from the Throne, viz., that from the moment of his entry into the Spanishill territory he had resolved to mingle his ideas and sentiments with those of the people who had entrusted their destinies to him. He is rapidly acquiring their language, and when be is muster of that his difficulties in understandingatho etrange intricacies of Spanish politice will be greatly reduced, and, from one or two maiters that bave occurred in the internal affairs of the Palace, it is easy to infer that he has a will of his own. He had hardly got settled in that magnificent abode ere political intrigues began to manifest themselves in real Spanish fashion, but the young King resolutely put his foot down, and gave the intriguera plainly to understand be would be master in his own house. Or be will frint that his rival bas openly triumphed because he has outwitted, or is going to outwit, the person to whom he (the eneak) is inlking. In fact, he will do all he can to injuriously malign the absent wight, and he will do this in such a way that you cannot flully contradict him, or make him, in any way, legally answerable for the slanders be bas been uttering were you disposed to do so. He does so much by inference, expresses such an infinitude of meaning by a look, a g imace, or a sight. If he shis more than usually clever he will "damn with faint praise." In his sneaking way he will be Queen's Road Central so pitying, and yet, withal, so condemnatory. In conversation he affects the gushing style But, with all his " gush," he tells you very little, and when you have finished a conversation of an hour's duration with him you find that you know just as much as you did before about his affairs, and no more. You also find, however, that you have told him many things which you had no intention of doing. .. He has learned that you are hard-up, and how you managed to form a business connection with a remarkably good firm. This is, of all things, the last you desired to tell him; of possibility that he may adopt the very course. pursued by you, and succeedin working you out and himself in, which, to say the least, would be decidedly.unpleasant. He has, also, drawn from you many of the acmi-secrets of your past-life, that is to say, things which you only tell to your! most trusted friends. You have told that once upon a time you were foolish and inclined to be done.
